

Indiana University School of Law IUPUI Campus, Indianapolis, Indiana

185,000 square foot law school with classrooms, library, moot court and mock trial rooms, clinical center, offices and student services.

Sited to serve as a significant campus gateway, design of the new law school reflects both the solidity and civic role of the legal system and modern, high quality character of this campus. Internally, the building is anchored by a central atrium to provide an easy means of orientation and a focal point for the school community.

Teaching spaces are varied for Socratic, case study, seminar and legal research methods. The library facilitates the increasing array of hard copy, electronic and audiovisual/interactive research sources and materials. In addition to library use, advanced technology are integrated for instructional, communications and administration uses.

The building defines the eastern edge of the campus and is visible from the campus as well as from downtown and canal areas. Because it is close to downtown, the school will open for the public to use as well as students and faculty.
